The loss of Ennio Morricone in July was such a blow to all of use who have loved his music all our lives.

In June and July of this year, during our stay-at-home times of Covid-19, we recorded this exquisitely beautiful Morricone piece called "Return To Life" from the 2005 film Fateless, with Simone Pedroni recording from his home studio in Novara, Italy and Sara Andon recording all three flute parts from her home studio in Los Angeles. This is a follow-up to our Sony Classical double CD Cinema Morricone. The results are magical.

As I said when I was first describing the piece to Sony ... I like to think of this as more of a beginning, not a farewell. ... The beginning of a new era of Morricone's music that will now be eternal. This is the first new recording of Ennio's music since his passing, a category that, forevermore, all subsequent recordings of Morricone music will join.

Endless thanks to our virtuoso musicians Sara Andon and Simone Pedroni, our recording and mix engineer Gabe Burch and our mastering engineer Patricia Sullivan.

This is such a moving and inspirational piece. Its message will mean something different to everyone, but I think it holds emotions and feelings that we all need, perhaps now more than ever. This is for everyone. ❤️
